Dear Mr. Skilling,

I live on a large South Texas ranch embroiled in lawsuits and a large scale El Paso Production drilling operation. I decided to make a webpage/reality show with the usual Tex-Mex border culture and current drug war as a backdrop. I approached El Paso about doing some skits, essays or an art contest for my blog. I thought they might submit something in the spirit of fun. I haven't heard back. El Paso did file a lawsuit against me for tortious interference. Perhaps that is there idea of a creative writing exercise.

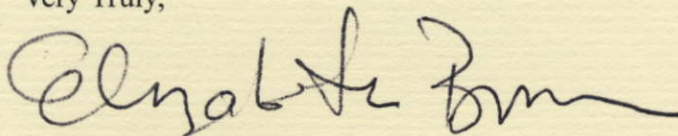

After the luke-warm response to my request, I figured that El Paso people might be busy doing whatever it is they do. I am aware that numerous El Paso executives have been convicted and sentenced to jail time. People have told me that jail involves a lot of free time. I thought maybe some El Paso guys in jail would like to contribute to my website. So, I searched the Board of Parole website and found that they had either completed their sentences or have not started them. While Googling "Gas Trader - conviction" I came across your name. I saw you were still serving time. I decided to write you and ask if you want to be a celebrity industry correspondent for my project.

I do not know if you have internet access in the prison. If you do, my website is: www.RanchoLosMalulos.com . It's a satire of our life on this oil lease and lawsuits. It's mostly stream of consciousness and supposed to be entertaining - a sort of a black comedy. Maybe you have the time to contribute something. It has to be goofy. You can right an essay, draw a picture, make a movie -- it can be fact, fiction, a mix. Whatever you want. I can post it as a random submission or attribute it to you.

I did not follow the Enron company or the trial so I don't have an opinion about your guilt or innocence. I am not looking for a contribution about Enron. Just something ridiculous or interesting about any topic. Maybe if you submit something, others will follow. If you don't have the internet and want to know more about my project, I can send you a hard copy.

Please consider my request.

Very Truly,

Elizabeth T. Burns
